<p&qt;Cristiano Ronaldo s decision to remove two Coca-Cola bottles from view at a press  conference, and dent the value of the 🌝 fizzy drink maker SS ponsorship of the European  Championship, has highlighted the risks brands face associating with s ports stars made  powerful 🌝 by the social media era. The Portugal captain, a renowned health fanatic who  eschews carbonated drinks and alcohol, underlined his point 🌝 by holding a bottle of <p&qt; water while saying agua , Portuguese and Spanish for water. The water brand in  guestion happened 🌝 to be owned by Coca-Cola too, but the dam by a major sports star age &It;p> with 550 million social media 🌝 followers was done.</p&g  It s obviously a big moment for  any brand when the world s most followed footballer on social media &# 127773; does something like  that, says Tim Crow, a sports marketing consultant who advised Coca-C ola on football <p&qt; sponsorship for two decades. 🌝 Coke pays tens of millions to be a Uefa sponsor and as  part of that there are contractual obligations for 🌝 federati ons and teams, including  taking part in press conferences with logos and products. But there ar e always <p&qt; risks. </p&qt; Major brands have 🌝 never been able to control the actions of their star  signings. Nike decided, stoically, to stand by Tiger Woods as 🌝 the golfing prodigy lost  sponsors including Gillette and Gatorade after a 2009 sex scandal. How ever, Ronaldo s <p&qt; public snub signifies a 🌝 different kind of threat to the onc e cosy commercial balance of <p&qt; power between stars and brands, one born of the 🌝 social medi a era.  Ronaldo is right at  the top of social media earners, says PR expert Mark Borkowski. lt i s about 🌝 the rise  of the personal brand, the personal channel, it gives so much bloody p s what ower. That  has allowed Ronaldo 🌝 to make a point [about a healthy lifest yle].
